Panel No. 10: Institutional ethics of military research and ethics of research with military institutions cancelled!

Director's hall

Chair: Dr. Adam Henschke (Australia), Prof.dr. David Whetham

As research funding is being cut across Europe, and as defence funding is being ramped up, many research institutions are facing the ethical challenge of whether they should collaborate on, and partner with, military research, and military institutions. What compounds this challenge is that much of the research itself either does not raise concerns for ethics committees or IRBs, or they do not have the necessary expertise in defence, national security, and geopolitics to properly assess the risks that this research might raise. As such, many universities across Europe are developing policies to guide military research and collaborations with partners either engaged in military activity or who contribute to military practices. This session is intended to be an opportunity for the Euro-ISME community to discuss the challenges that they are facing in space, to share what policies their institutions are developing or have in place, and to explore what options are available for researchers and institutions moving forward.
